

Benz Patent Motorwagen Replika

Karl Benz's goal was to build a vehicle in which engine, chassis and powertrain formed a single organic unit. His „Patent Motor Car“, which was granted patent DRP 37435 on 29 January 1886, was not based on a converted horse carriage, but represented an independent, integrated design. Between 1885 and 1887, Karl Benz developed a total of three different versions, with only one of each of the first two being built. It was in an example of the third version that Bertha Benz and her sons Richard and Eugen undertook the legendary journey from Mannheim to Pforzheim in early August 1888, the first long-distance journey in the history of the automobile.

Mercedes-Benz Classic has had just a few replicas of the Patent Motor Car built. The specimen on offer here is an exhibition piece with correspondingly few signs of wear. Although technically drivable, this model vehicle is not approved for use on the road. It is a highlight for every vehicle collection. The purchase price includes 19% VAT. The photos are examples.
